Henry James and Consciousness: The Evolution of the Novel—Bruce Philip Tracy 1971 A small book, a ground-breaking work that challenges the traditional view of Henry James's work. The author argues that James's work is not simply a reflection of his own life and experiences, but is a conscious and intentional exploration of the nature of consciousness.

After studying medicine, he ultimately realized that his true interests lay in philosophy and psychology, a choice that guided his storied career at Harvard, where he taught in the philosophy, teaching, and religion—on modernism itself. Often cited as the "father of American psychology," William James was an intellectual luminary who made Psychology, according to James, deals with thoughts and feelings as its facts and does not attempt to determine where such things come from. This would be the realm of psychology.

In his first book, Principles of Psychology (1890) immediately established James as the leading psychologist of his time, at a moment in history when psychology seemed to offer the promise of finding some profound key to understanding human behavior. This book's most influential ideas were to preoccupy many of the writers who came to maturity in the first half of the twentieth century.

Henry James—Barbara Hardy 1995 Barbara Hardy has concentrated on the late period from 1900 to 1916, observing language and theme in close readings of The Ambassadors, The Wings of the Dove, The Sacred Fount, the great ghost-story, The Jolly Corner and other tales, autobiography, travel and the influential criticism. She has been writing about James since the fifties and draws on long experience of teaching James— to addicts, hostile parodists, and persevering fiction-lovers fascinated by a demandingly extravagant and original novelist. She offers new readings of the major novels, and revaluation of the literary criticism in the context of later ideas, which James's theory and practice anticipate. Her close analysis traces generative imaging-making and reflexive story-telling, following two dominant and complementary themes, the social construction of character, and creative imagination. James dramatises the power of environment, to dismiss essentialism and ask the key question 'What shall we call the self?'; and Psychology—William James 1920 The Sacred Fount—Henry James 1901 In this novel of curiosity, the unnamed narrator spends his weekend holiday trying to discover the truth of his fellow guests’ sex lives.
